A Training School

for

Porto Rican Social-Religious Workers

What it is—?

A home school where young Christian girls may secure a three-year course in theory and organized practical experience in Christian service connected with church or neighborhood house.

The training school was added to the other activities of the Marina Mission in September 1922 with four students. In 1925 twelve were enrolled.

Who may enter—?

Young girls who have completed at least the first year of high school and have given evidence of upright Christian character.

together with practical experience in kindergarten and primary teaching; the organization and handling of boys' and girls' clubs; the organization and teaching of Sunday-school and other church groups; simple home nursing; visiting; Daily Vacation Bible School; and many other activities connected with a wide-awake up-to-date neighborhood house.

What does it cost—?

The students are on a student help basis. For service to the mission through work in the school, the church, and the mission household, they receive tuition and board. In addition, students may earn a small amount for extra work in the Neighborhood House and for occasional special services rendered neighboring churches and communities.
